This person gave 5 stars. Sounds like they might be a friend of the Woman's club since many comments are about the club vs. the show.

The Santa Monica Bay Women's Club was a beautiful building/theater in the happening part of Santa Monica with a historical feel inside.

Overall the dancers were pretty good and very fun - they ranged in age and area of expertise. The main dancers really did a fabulous job with a very wide range of dancing.

The performance started with, I believe a Zulu dance performance and continued alternating with live dances, antique footage, and filmed works. The theme - appreciating African and African contributions to dance in America was wonderful and presented a respectful position in dealing with overt oppression through the ages. I love dance and this performance was historically very interesting and useful in understanding at least, the last century of dance and the African contribution including dances from the Caribbean, South America, and the US.

Wine and deserts were served by beautiful ladies serving were dressed to the nines, or tens (if I can say that). The wine was simple but a nice; an unexpected treat. The deserts were home made by at least one talented baker: the powdered sugar lemon bunt cake - delicious.

All in all, a lovely evening. One food for thought - I would like to have seen more personality or humor in the announcer (I believe it was a recording). At times, he was a bit dry.

Process Comments:

Excellent. Very welcoming and accommodating.
